

Our Saint's blessed

HOMEGROWN hunk All Saints' Paul Tassone was back in town this week to chill out with his many Italian rellies and share a coffee with Perth confidential.

And, breaking with his tradition of visiting WA only once a year, he promised to grace our presence again next month for Telethon.

The Bondi-based actor — who, by the way, is mighty fanciable but, unfortunately, happily spoken for — left Perth six years ago, after appearing in the memorable Sweat TV series.

Since then he has been following his dream of breaking into the world of high-profile serious acting, which he has achieved in Seven's popular medico series All Saints as registered nurse Nelson Curtis.

After a year on the show he has a legion of female fans and the sky is looking bright for the 32-year-old who still has another year to run on his contract.

He said in a year he would reassess his position, but for now he was happy being signed to the show, which celebrates its 200th episode with high drama this week.

Tassone is at home on the set with fellow Perthites Martin Lynnes and Tammy McIntosh.

HEAVEN SENT: All Saints actor Paul Tassone back home in Perth this week.
